THE IBERIAN ENIGMA

archaeology
of a civilization

Iberian civilization, one of the most important of the European Iron Age, received attention from some Greek-Latin historians but fell into oblivion until the seventeenth century when the study of its language was addressed, and again later when the archaeological discoveries of the late nineteenth century, surrounded by controversy, went beyond erudite circles to become a subject of more general attention.

Works such as the Dame of Elche have become popular icons, but now archaeology allows us to explore in depth this group of villages, established between the Gulf of Lyon and the south-east of the peninsular, to address their essential features and their diversity of expressions.

The exhibition was created with the aim of making the latest research available to everyone, with a new look and to extend its links with the Archaeology Museum of Catalonia under the premise: Iberian culture is a current topic of study and debate and there are still unknowns to solve.

1. In search of the Iberians

The first major find linked to the Iberian world was in the mid-19th century in Cerro de los Santos (Montealegre del Castillo, Albacete), where hundreds of stone sculptures appeared.

2. The Iberian mosaic

The Iberians are a heterogeneous group of peoples who occupied the Mediterranean coastal region between Almeria and northern Catalonia between the 6th and 1st centuries BC.

3. The first Iberians

The Iberians are not peoples from other lands, as initially thought. Current research defends gradual processes of evolution of the local population in all areas.

4. The time of princes

The prosperity of Iberian society was in parallel with the consolidation of a hereditary warrior aristocracy that resided in imposing buildings in the main towns.

5. Inside Iberia

As regards to economic strategies, the internal diversity of the Iberian world is evident. Everywhere basic activities are developed, but there is also a clear regional diversification.

6. Between Rome and Carthage

The conflict between Rome and Carthage in the 3rd century BC. had a global effect by involving many other peoples, including the Iberians.

7. The end of the world

At the end of the 1st century Rome completed the conquest of the Iberian Peninsula. Local cultures would eventually disappear in favour of the language, laws and religion of the empire.
